

Working with Anger in Group Psychotherapy

Promote language rather than action as the favored pathway for expressing anger.

Foster constructive rather than destructive anger. Constructive anger facilitates understanding and relational progress.

Regulate the amount of stimulation experienced by group members.

Disrupt processes of marginalization, objectification, and scapegoating.

Encourage reflection upon the motivation and meaning of angry feelings within oneself and others.